New partnership between two industry leaders will advance active shooter prevention and critical incident response.

SAN FRANCISCO, CA (PRWEB) APRIL 27, 2016

Regroup Mass Notification, the award-winning leader in emergency and mass communication technology, today announced the creation of a strategic alliance with CGPGMG, LLC, nationally-recognized active shooter and domestic terrorism prevention experts.

During an active shooter event or terrorist attack, institutions need to not only notify the public about the situation, but also ensure the right steps are taken to guarantee people's safety. This new partnership will cover both aspects of successfully responding to a crisis.

By combining CGPGMG's critical response expertise with Regroup's powerful communication platform, mutual clients will be better prepared to react amid an active shooter and effectively utilize mass communication technology during the event. Disseminating crucial information and instructions in a timely and reliable manner will ensure the right procedures are followed and lives are saved.

"The best outcome of any active shooter event is that it ends without any casualties. We know that the average active shooter event ends in seven minutes, while it takes police an average of 14–

During an active shooter event or terrorist attack, institutions need to not only notify the public about the situation, but also ensure the 17 minutes to arrive on the scene. It is therefore critical that institutions take the lead in communicating with employees and other key constituents, and provide them with rapid notification of the event, as well as actionable instructions for staying out of harm's way. By partnering with Regroup, we've found a communication solution that when combined with our training, we feel will save lives," said Chris Grollnek, Co-Founder and CEO of CGPGMG.

Regroup's powerful, yet easy-to-use mass notification platform is leveraged by universities, government agencies, corporations and nonprofits across North America to streamline emergency and day-to-day communications.

"We're very pleased to be partnering with CGPGMG. Chris is one of the most well-respected and sought-after experts in the United States when it comes to active shooter prevention training. Our clients often look to us as a trusted advisor when it comes to recommending solutions. When our mutual clients add Chris's training with our mass notification platform, we feel they are putting effective measures in place that will guarantee the best possible outcome should an active shooter strike at their workplace," said Joe DiPasquale, CEO of Regroup.
